Hay River Mayor's Message

Our Recreation Centre has opened and just in time for the Arctic Winter Games!

We are very excited to showcase our new facility and share it with all of the athletes, coaches, families, and visitors. We know that you will be happy to be among the first people to use the Recreation Centre.

Our community has been working hard to make everything ready for the games, sharing the responsibility with our co-host community, Fort Smith and the K'at'l'Odeche First Nation, who will be hosting the Dene Games. The entire South Slave has pulled together and we are proud of all that has been accomplished. We are ready to make the 25th Arctic Winter Games a memorable event for everyone involved.

We welcome the Circumpolar World to Hay River and we hope that you have the best week of sport, friendship and fun. Our community will be a hub of activity during the games and we have all hands on deck. Do not hesitate to ask for assistance or direction around our beautiful town. Many cultural events will be taking place throughout the week for all to enjoy. There will be the frenzy of collectable pin trading at the table that you will find at the Community Centre at the Recreation Complex.

A huge Hay River welcome to all our visitors for the games; I look forward to meeting as many as possible.

Be Fearless. Be Strong. Be True. Find Your Power!

Sincerely,

Mayor Brad Mapes

Kevin Koe calls the line during men's curling action at the 2018 Winter Olympics in PyeongChang, South Korea last month. Koe's road to the Winter Olympics featured two appearances at the Arctic Winter Games in 1992 and 1994

The Games can create Olympians

Kevin Koe and Michael Gilday examples of AWG veterans among the best in the world

Northern News Services

For many athletes who compete at the Arctic Winter Games, this is the furthest they will go in terms of high-level international competition.

There are others, though, that have gone on to greater heights, such as the professional ranks and the Winter Olympics.

Two of those who have worn the maple leaf at the Winter Olympics spoke with Ulu News to reflect on competing against the world's best in their respective sports: Kevin Koe, who competed at the 2018 Winter Olympics in men's curling, and Michael Gilday, a 2014 Winter Olympian in speedskating.

Koe has one of the premier curling resumes among anyone in the world with three Tim Hortons Brier titles – the Canadian men's curling championship – to go along with two World Men's Curling Championship crowns and his Olympic experience, which ended in a fourth-place finish.

His trajectory can be traced back to the Arctic Winter Games where he curled for the NWT in 1992 and 1994, and he said it was a great experience for him.

"Those were my first real events away from home against other territories and teams," he said. "I remember it being an awesome experience and a chance to play in an international competition for the first time against a team like Alaska."

For Gilday, he achieved his dream of competing at the Winter Olympics after the heartbreak of missing out on the 2010 Winter Olympics by mere hundredths of a second at the Canadian trials that year.

Time to find your power!

On behalf of the 2018 Host Society, welcome to the 2018 South Slave Arctic Winter Games.

We are excited to be hosting the commemorative 25th edition of the Arctic Winter Games in the South Slave Region, and we are thrilled that you could be here to experience all that the region has to offer.

More than 40 volunteer committees and our staff have dedicated countless hours to planning the 2018 Games, and I know every volunteer is as excited as I am to witness the culmination of those efforts be realized this week. A special thank you to our corporate sponsors, our host communities, and the many supporters that have assisted from around the region and across the circumpolar north.

I hope you find the time to experience all the attractions of the South Slave region, to cheer on your favourite team or athlete, and to find your power!

Welcome to athletes and delegates from near and far

On behalf of the Government of the Northwest Territories, I wish to welcome all of the athletes, cultural delegates, coaches, chaperones, mission Staff, sponsors, parents and spectators to the 2018 Arctic Winter Games.

The Arctic Winter Games is the largest and most important multi-sport cultural event held in the circumpolar North, bringing together young athletes and Games participants as they represent our respective nations.

The experiences our young people are about to embark upon will help develop their character to become confident, responsible leaders and contributors in their communities.

I would like to wish all the visiting coaches, supporters and family members of athletes who have come from outside of the Northwest Territories an enjoyable time at the Games and in our country. To our local athletes and to all the visiting athletes, I know that you will represent your respective teams with honour and pride. We are here to support you to do your very best.

I wish you all a successful and enjoyable Games.

Welcome to the 2018 Arctic Winter Games!

Games represent tradition and culture

Welcome to the 2018 South Slave Arctic Winter Games.

I wish to acknowledge that the land on which we gather for these multi-community Arctic Winter Games encompasses Treaty 8 and Treaty 11 lands and is home to the Kát'odeeche First Nation, West Point First Nation, Salt River First Nation, Smith's Landing First Nation, and NWT Metis Nation.

This is an exciting time as athletes, parents, cultural delegates, coaches, mission staff, chaperones, sponsors, and spectators come together to celebrate the hard work, dedication and commitment that has brought us here to the Arctic Winter Games.

As these Games bring our circumpolar

Team NT gets set for 2018 Arctic Winter Games

Doug Rentmeister has been doing this for so long that it's become old hat.

But he still gets excited whenever the Arctic Winter Games approach.

de mission was putting the finishing touches on this year's Arctic Winter Games team earlier this month ahead of the biggest show in the Arctic.

"We're just moving along," said Rentmeister at the time.

Team NT's contingent will consist of 350 athletes, coaches, mission staff and cultural performers. The cultural delegation this time around will be the Tuktoyaktuk Siglit Drummers and Michael Gilday (204) comes around the corner during speedskating action at the 2014 Winter Olympics in Sochi, Russia. Gilday competed for Team NWT at four Arctic Winter Games between 1998 and 2004.

Get a good team, good coach, and train hard

He, too, had multiple Arctic Winter Games competitions – four to be exact – between 1998 and 2004.

He said stepping on the ice for the first time competitively isn't something he remembers all too well but he does recall the team's veterans in 1998 imparting on him the honour of wearing the uniform.

"I remember them stressing upon me how important it was to wear the gear we got with pride," he said. "There was a sort of gravitas about how representing the NWT was bigger than representing just your club and carrying on the tradition that the NWT has in short-track, which is a long and very successful one."

Gilday was a member of Canada's national men's short-track team for several years and even broke the men's 1,000-metre world record at the age of 20 in 2007, when he was still a member of the national development team. He competed in several World Cup events and World Short Track Championships around the globe over the course of his career before retiring from competitive skating shortly after the 2014 Winter Olympics.

His dream of competing at the Olympics started to gain traction in 2001.

"I had good results at nationals that year and at the 2002 Arctic Winter Games in Iqaluit," he said. "I think that's when the Olympics started being a focal point of my life."

Koe also had dreams of competing at the Olympics but those came later as curling didn't become an official medal sport until 1998; it had been a demonstration sport prior to that at the 1988 Winter Olympics in Calgary.

Back in his Arctic Winter Games days, the Olympics never crossed his mind and it was all about the task at hand.

"I didn't put a lot of thought into (the Olympics) back then," Koe said. "I was just a kid and wanted to do well out on the ice and whatever event I was playing in. You always wanted to win and I definitely went with the intention of doing so. You're representing your home territory and you wanted to do well. I always took (the AWG) seriously."

Comparing the Arctic Winter Games to the Winter Olympics is a stretch, considering the size and grandeur of the Winter Olympics. But Gilday managed to quantify the two events in one sense.

"There's more countries at the Olympics, there's more media and it's a much bigger profile but the numbers of athletes are comparable," he said. "If you take the number of Winter Olympic athletes and put it beside the Arctic Winter Games, it's not terribly dissimilar. You can't do a full comparison because they simply aren't the same but it's cool to look at it from that perspective."

Something else Gilday likes about the Arctic Winter Games set-up is the community feel of it.

"You're representing your home territory and you wanted to do well."

Kevin Koe

"You're in a dorm room-type setting for a week and you're rooming with athletes from Alaska, Alberta, Yukon," he said. "You get to know those people and learn about their lives and their culture and that's something I always enjoyed. The fact that it's in the South Slave this year will make it really feel like a community event."

As for advice on what it would take to become an Olympian, Koe said it's about making sure you have the right mix.

"Try and get yourself good teammates, get good coaching, practise on a regular basis and compete hard every time," he said. "Take every game seriously, no matter the level."

But most of all, enjoy the experience, like Gilday did.

"The AWG was far out for prep when it came to the Olympics but looking back, it provided me with an idea of what the Olympics would look like," he said. "I've always looked back fondly on it and there's no reason others can't either. Always enjoy the experience and cherish it."

Dancers and their big show will be on March 23 at the cultural gala in Fort Smith.

Many of the athletes were spending time in Yellowknife the week before heading down to Hay River to work on whatever needed to be worked on, said Rentmeister.

"Everyone arrived early to get ready and you can sense the excitement," he said.

The one thing people will notice right away is the name change. Gone is the "W" with the delegation now known as Team NT from now on.

"We wanted to go in line with what's happening nationally," said Rentmeister. "When we go to the Canada Games, they use two-letter abbreviations and the AWG International Committee wants to fall in line with that so that's where the name change comes from."

Something else which should be noted is the number of officials from the NWT that will be part of the action.

"We'll have the largest amount of officials from any delegation and that just makes sense seeing as it's being held here in the NWT," said Rentmeister. "Some of the seats on our charter flights will be held for them so they can get down." Speaking of the charters, one will leave from Inuvik on March 17 with a stop in Norman Wells to pick up athletes from the Sahtu who made their way there. After that, they will pick up the athletes in Yellowknife and fly directly to Fort Smith to pick up those athletes before heading to the final destination of Hay River in time for the opening ceremonies.

As for the hopes and dreams part of the proceedings, Rentmeister didn't want to put any sort of pressure on the athletes.

"I always hesitate to put any sort of expectations on our team," he said. "That just puts pressure on the athletes and coaches and they don't need that. All we're hoping is that they put their best foot forward and do the territory proud."

One important piece of the puzzle was figuring out who the flag bearer would be and that honour falls to TJ Kaskamin of Fort Good Hope, who will be on the boys basketball team.

Rentmeister said Kaskamin was chosen from several submissions that came from coaches around the territory.

"We had a lot of submissions from coaches and that shows just how much that means," he said.

Mayor of Fort Smith - Welcome!

It is my pleasure to extend greetings to everyone attending the 2018 Arctic Winter Games, hosted by the communities of Fort Smith and Hay River.

On behalf of the citizens of Fort Smith and my Town Council colleagues, we welcome you as our guests for this very special celebration. It is our honour to be your host for this exciting event.

I would like to commend the organizers for the hard work that goes into coordinating this terrific celebration of athletic and cultural skills. The Arctic Winter Games are filled with captivating and challenging sports and performances that require focus and discipline. I would like to recognize the talented athletes and performers for all their dedication and enthusiasm. Special thanks are also due to the countless volunteers, coaches, and parents for their unwavering support of our participants.

If you are visiting from out of town, I hope that you will enjoy our warm hospitality and visit some of our beautiful attractions:

- Wood Buffalo National Park
- Northern Life Museum & Cultural Centre
- Night Sky Observatory in the largest dark sky preserve on earth!
- Stunning trails along the Slave River

Fort Smith has a diverse cultural and arts community, as well as a number of unique shops and restaurants for you to enjoy.

I would like to extend my best wishes for a successful and enjoyable event and I wish all those participating the best of luck. Let the games begin!

Sincerely,

Mayor Lynn Napier-Buckley

Discover diversity through the Games

Welcome to the 2018 South Slave Arctic Winter Games!

These Games are a tremendous celebration of Northern sport and culture. They invite us to discover and appreciate the diverse peoples, traditions and heritage of the world's circumpolar regions. They exemplify the power of sport to improve health, well-being and community development.

Our government is proud to support the Arctic Winter Games, which help develop Northern and Indigenous sport and leadership, and inspire our youth to get active. They will also bring economic, social and cultural benefits for the entire South Slave region.

As Minister of Science and Minister of Sport and Persons with Disabilities, I would like to congratulate the host society and all volunteers, artists and performers involved in these Games.

Best of luck to all the athletes, and many thanks to the coaches and officials for helping them reach their dreams.

Bienvenue aux Jeux d'hiver de l'Arctique

Bienvenue aux Jeux d'hiver de l'Arctique 2018 à South Slave.

Les Jeux sont une formidable célébration du sport et de la culture nordiques. Ils nous invitent à découvrir et à apprécier les peuples, les traditions et le patrimoine des régions circumpolaires du monde. De plus, ils nous montrent les effets bénéfiques du sport sur la santé, le bien-être et le développement communautaire.

Notre gouvernement est fier d'appuyer les Jeux d'hiver de l'Arctique, qui contribuent au développement du sport et du leadership nordiques et autochtones, en plus d'inciter nos jeunes à mener une vie plus active. Qui plus est, ils entraîneront des avantages économiques, sociaux et culturels pour toute la région de South Slave.

À titre de ministre des Sciences et ministre des Sports et des Personnes handicapées, je félicite la Société hôte ainsi que tous les bénévoles, les artistes et les interprètes qui se sont investis dans les Jeux. Bonne chance à tous les athlètes, et merci aux entraîneurs et officiels qui les aident à réaliser leurs rêves.

Team Nunavik ready for action at 2018 Arctic Winter Games

by James McCarthy
Northern News Services

They're one of the longest-serving members of the Arctic Winter Games family, and Team Nunavik is back for another biennial battle.

This year's contingent from northern Quebec will comprise 52 athletes, 11 coaches, eight mission staff and three cultural performers, who will be performing throat singing.

The cultural delegation hails from the community of Puvirnituk and the throat-singing trio also performed as part of a larger group at the 2016 Arctic Winter Games in Greenland.

Karin Kettler, the team's chef de mission this year, said Nunavik will be competing in five sports.

"We have teams in Arctic sports, Dene games, badminton, snowshoeing and table tennis," she said.

"We did have cross-country skiers last time but not this year."

The team did well in Arctic sports and Dene games in Greenland, collecting several ulus. Kettler thinks the snowshoeing team has a good shot this time around.

"They've been training hard leading up to the start and I know they're hoping to medal this year," she said.

Preparing for the Games is a two-year process in Nunavik.

Kettler said the process usually begins in the fall in the year of the previous Games with local tryouts in the 14 communities that make up the Nunavik region.

"We have local tryouts which are run by the local recreation coordinators," she said.

"If there's no recreation coordinator, then we ask the school teachers to help out."

From there, athletes are invited to regional tryouts based on where they reside – seven communities take part in the Ungava Bay regionals while the other seven go to the Hudson Bay region. After that, the strongest athletes are invited to the final tryouts, where the teams are selected.

As with many other teams, the only expectations are that the athletes represent the region well.

"We're all about fair play," said Kettler.

"It's a great chance for our athletes to see others competing in their sports and see the other cultures that make up the Games.

"It's exciting for them and it's a great opportunity for our young people to meet new people."

The team arrived in Kuujuaq, Que., on March 15 to get their uniforms and hop on a charter to fly to Yellowknife.

Nunavik's flag bearer this year will be Paulusie Nuktie from Kangiqsujuaq, a badminton player who will be competing in his second Arctic Winter Games.

"They've been training hard leading up to the start."

Games represent best examples of sportsmanship

I would like to welcome all of the athletes, cultural delegates, coaches, chaperones, mission staff, sponsors, parents and spectators who are here at the 2018 Arctic Winter Games in the South Slave.

The Arctic Winter Games represent the best examples of community, friendship, sportsmanship and unity that define the Northern spirit.

I hope you find the Games to be rewarding and I encourage you to extend the warmest hospitality to all who have joined together for these Games.

My sincere thanks to the volunteers, coaches, parents, and sport leaders who played a key role in the development of our athletes. Your contributions encourage our youth to lead healthy, active lifestyles, which improves the physical and mental well-being of our youth.

Congratulations to all on a job well done!

Team Sapmi usually brings athletes in just two sports for the Arctic Winter Games, and they're usually at or near the top of those events every time.

The Northernmost team of the event is bringing a delegation of 45 athletes, coaches and mission staff for this year's show along with three cultural representatives, comprising two traditional Sapmi dancers and a traditional Sapmi singer.

Inga Eira is chef de mission for Team Sapmi for the first time, having been named as the team leader last June.

"I'm very excited," she said about her role. "I'm excited to see our athletes do well and I'm excited for everything to begin."

"I'm excited to see our athletes do well."

Inga Eira

The two sports Sapmi will compete in are cross-country skiing and futsal. Eira said coaches and athletes in both disciplines were getting ready well in advance of the Games.

"The cross-country skiers had a competition followed by two training camps," she

Team Yamal sends 100-strong contingent to the Northwest Territories for the 2018 AWG

by James McCarthy
Northern News Services

Team Yamal logs a lot of air miles.

Despite the vast distance to travel from Russia, Yamal will march into the 2018 Arctic Winter Games with a contingent of 100 athletes, coaches, mission staff, chaperones and cultural delegates.

Jana Wrublevska, assistant to Yamal chef de mission Aleksandr Mazharov, said the team is ready to go.

"Very excited and very enthusiastic," she said via email.

This year's Team Yamal is drastically different from the one that showed up in Greenland two years ago. The first thing people will notice is they're competing in more than just Arctic sports; all eight of Yamal's ulus in 2016 were won in that sport. This time around, they've brought athletes in Arctic sports, ski and snowshoe biathlon, futsal, figure skating, cross-country skiing and table tennis.

Wrublevska said putting the team together happened at regional trials in the months leading up to the start of the Games.

"Athletes were chosen at the regional competitions according to the (sport's) principles," she said. "The winners of that trials were included in the team's final roster."

There's no denying that Arctic sports will be one event where Yamal will have plenty of strong ulu hopefuls but they've also been successful in the past in cross-country skiing and biathlon.

Wrublevska, though, was hesitant about predicting how the team would do in the long run.

"Time and the 2018 AWG competitions will show," she said. "The only thing we are sure of is that all our athletes have strong feelings to do their best."

"We do not talk about expectations," she said. "We know that our team are happy to be the part of the AWG family, meet new friends and learn more about sport and Northern cultures. The only thing we expect is that our young athletes will have a positive international competition experience, try their sport skills in a new environment and have a lot of good memories to inspire them."

Yamal is one of two jurisdictions that has yet to host the Arctic Winter Games, Sapmi, in northern Europe, being the other location.

But Wrublevska is hopeful that could change in the future.

"We hope it will happen one year," she said.

"All our athletes have strong feelings to do their best."

Greenland aims to meet or exceed 2016 results

Past host looks to capitalize on strong showing from last AWG

by James McCarthy
Northern News Services

Greenland hosted the Arctic Winter Games on its own for the first time in 2016 and put on a strong showing by earning 81 ulus.

The team's chef de mission is hopeful that level of success can continue this time around.

Team Greenland has come to the 2018 Arctic Winter Games with a 155-strong team of athletes, coaches, mission staff and cultural delegates. They'll be competing in nine sports and there's every chance they'll be right in the mix when it comes to handing out ulus.

"Our sport federations met in Nuuk (Greenland's capital) a few months ago to talk about how the athletes will do," said Jonas Jensen, Greenland's chef de mission. "They're hoping to have the same number of medals as we did in 2016. There's no set number of medals but we hope to do as good as we did two years ago."

While most of the teams put their entries together late in 2017, Greenland has been in preparation mode for the past two years, gearing up again almost immediately after the 2016 AWG came to an end.

Jensen said that was done to give the sport organizations a chance to prepare.

"They choose their athletes that train with them, a lot of them are young athletes who have a lot of talent," he said. "They then sorted through the athletes and reduced those numbers over the past year."

Greenland is a legitimate threat in several sports with badminton, table tennis and futsal being three sports where the team always does well. Arctic sports and Dene games are also events where Greenland will be challenging for the podium.

"I hope all of our sports will have success," said Jensen. "Our cross-country ski team has been working hard also and they're well-prepared because of 2016."

The team headed to the community of Kangerlussuaq, Greenland on March 12 to have a training session before leaving for the NWT and Jensen said the excitement was building.

"We handed out the uniforms in Kangerlussuaq and everyone is excited," he said.

"It's been a busy last few weeks for all of us to get ready and we're all hoping to have a great time. For our young athletes who are going for the first time, I hope they have a great experience."

"I hope all of our sports will have success."

'We're used to long trips' said. "Those who had the best times were selected for the team. For futsal, the team leader of our football association picked who made the team from the players who tried out."

There wasn't an official Sapmi AWG team meeting held before leaving for the Games, but they did have a small get together in Denmark, before taking off on March 15.

"There wasn't a lot of talk," said Eira. "I did go to one of the training camps to see how things were going.

We didn't really talk about what we are expecting. Of course, we want to win but we want everyone to enjoy themselves and do their very best."

Once the team arrived in Yellowknife, they were set to take the highway for the five-hour journey into Hay River.

They would have company on that road trip as the Greenlandic delegation was to share their transportation.

"We're used to long trips so the long bus ride is no big deal," said Eira. "Our communities are far away from each other."
