The Spirit of the games lives on

Congratulations to the YMCA Wood Buffalo

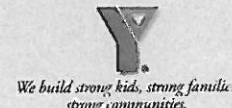

When the 2004 Arctic Winter Games are complete, RBC's commitment to youth and community will continue.

RBC Financial Group™, through RBC Foundation, has committed $40,000 to the YMCA Wood Buffalo over the next two years. The YMCA will use the funds to enhance and expand the YMCA's pre-teen and teen programming, including a weekly Friday teen night. The donation is a legacy of the 2004 Arctic Winter Games, also sponsored by RBC.

It's one of the many ways RBC is helping to prepare our youth for a successful future.

Alberta men, women take basketball titles

By JEFF KORENKO
Ulu News

Call it a northern court coronation eight days in the making.

After more than a week of setting aside everyone they faced, both Alberta North's basketball teams garnered Arctic Winter Games gold ulus in decisive fashion Friday.

The boys staked claim to the 2004 Arctic roundball title by running past the kids from the Klondike 90-56, while the ladies dethroned reigning champion Alaska 75-50.

Both games took place in front of about 1,200 boisterous fans at a packed Father Mercredi Community high school.

Duinker led the girls to their championship by spreading the ball around and dropping in a game-high 29 points.

Alberta North, which shot 44 per cent from the field, also received 15 from Duinker's sister Jaelle and 12 from Fort McMurray's Steph Edison, while Grande Prairie's Melissa Schmidt and Mandy Van Dresar chipped in with nine and four points, respectively.

"It was such a good game," beamed Van Dresar, who didn't seem to mind the fact she spent a good chunk of time on the bench because of foul trouble and didn't get her points until the game was well in hand.

"We got into a little difficulty in the second quarter but we pulled through it," Van Dresar said.

The Alberta North women's hoops squad consisted of five players from Grande Prairie and five from McMurray. The key to the success they enjoyed this past week was their ability to come together as a cohesive unit, Van Dresar, who was competing in her first Arctic Winter Games, noted.

"We thought early on there wouldn't be much team chemistry, but this has just been amazing," said Van Dresar. "We all came together so quickly and we showed some real passion for the game and each other.

"This has just been the highlight of my life."

Please see 'Duinker, Jansen'/Page 6.

Duinker, Jansen earn MVP awards for game efforts

Leading Alaska on the scoreboard were Brittini Dixon and Prisela Campbell, who each dropped in 14 points.

The Alberta North women came out hard and executed their game plan to perfection after both side seemed nervously disjointed on offence.

Leading merely 11-10 with four minutes remaining in the opening quarter, Alberta North proved a pressure defence and a lightning-quick transition game can be a lethal combination, as they scored six consecutive times to lead 23-10 after 10 minutes.

Melissa Duinker, who recorded just 10 of her 29 points in the opening half, as Alberta enjoyed a 39-28 advantage, took the game over in the second, picking her spots to shoot and starting the break with precise passing.

Duinker's effort earned her team's MVP honour, while Dixon got the nod for Alaska, who made just 19 of 70 shots for a 27 per cent clip.

"It was a tough game. Alaska got better and better with every game they played," praised Duinker. "They stepped it up and came out hard but we were still able to make sure we played our game, maintained control, set the pace and ran hard.

"The whole team played their hearts out and it was a total team effort," she said while grinning from ear to ear.

Duinker admitted that what she was able to take away from the week's competition will definitely help her and those on her team who are heading into their senior year of high school basketball in Grande Prairie.

"I wouldn't trade this for the world. It has given me a little bit of an idea what calibre of competition is actually out there and what I have to do to bring up my game heading into this season," she said.

The Alberta North boys meanwhile had a lot to live up to following the girls' fine performance and they didn't disappoint, giving the Fort McMurray faithful exactly what they wanted — a sweep by the hosts.

Coming out running as well, they went on a 9-2 run in the first 1:44 of the opening quarter against the Yukon, hitting four of their first six shots and never looked back.

The team, coached by Grande Prairie Bill Shaw and including Swan City players Navdeep Dhaliwal, Tyrone Pike, Mike Reeve and Adam Shaw and Peace River's Curtis Haugan, dominated the Yukon in all facets of the game in enjoying quarter leads of 21-24, 48-25 and 63-37.

Reeve and Dhaliwal paced the squad with 15 points apiece, while Haugan had 14, and Shaw and Fairview's Dylan Grason scored 10.

"It took a lot of work with the guys. We had a lot of camps that we went through. It's kind of hard to talk right now because we did it, you know? We rose to the top. It's great stuff," said Shaw, showing signs of emotion.

"The fact his team and the girls' squad had to compete in front of a home-town crowd in an Arctic Winter Games for the first time since Slave Lake in 1994 wasn't about pressure, but a confidence booster, the coach said.

"I didn't really feel there was a lot of pressure on us. When I looked at the fact Alaska had been the perennial champions, I considered it a challenge to see if we could be good enough to beat them.

"The home crowd really helped and elevated our play."

The Alberta North men drained 40 of 92 shots from the floor (43 per cent) including five three-pointers.

Haugan, who was named the Alberta North game MVP also electrified the masses with a running dunk in the fourth quarter that put an exclamation point on the team's effort.

The Yukon, which hit on 17 of 58 shots (29 per cent) simply had no answer for Alberta's size under the boards or their run-and-gun style of play.

The Yukon was led by forward Kevin Darling, who contributed 16 points and a game-MVP effort from post Andrew Jansen, who scored 10.

"We came out with a good game, running lots,"

The home crowd really helped and elevated our play.

said Dhaliwal. "We had a good start and we just kept going all the way through. We run the floor so much better than everyone else and I think our running game was the difference in that game especially.

"We didn't get down on ourselves when times got a little tough. What a great feeling this is."

The N.W.T. captured the bronze ulus in the girls' hoops tournament, while Alaska was third on the boys' side.

Looking back on the week that was: Arctic Winter Games reflections

Ulu News staff

What a ride.

Upon reflection, it's almost impossible to grasp all that has transpired in the past eight days.

While the whirlwind known as the 2004 Arctic Winter Games draws to a close today having exceeded the expectations of everyone who had the pleasure of being in Fort McMurray, there is sure to be an emotional letdown as thousands of athletes, officials, delegates and volunteers must all now go their separate ways.

However, all involved can be warmed by the fact they took part in the most spectacular sporting and cultural gathering ever held in the Wood Buffalo region. The memories you have acquired will last a lifetime.

As goodbyes are exchanged today, we offer you a collaboration of thoughts derived from the

2004 Wood Buffalo AWGs:

RICHARD WRIGHT: Like most people, the first time I heard someone say Arctic Winter Games I hadn't a clue what they were talking about. I was right out of broadcasting school and was supposed to be a radio sports announcer.

Instead I found myself covering local politics and a busy court beat for a small Slave Lake newspaper.

In describing the job when he offered it to me, the owner of the paper told me part of my duties would be to also cover the 1994 Arctic Winter Games.

Now, almost through my third Arctic Winter Games, I can't help but still feel part of the minority. My sense of northern alienation has never felt so strong. I've enjoyed every minute of the three Games I've covered and can fully appreciate what they offer, what they try to achieve and what they do for northern athletes.

Still, out of a number of good friends in Edmonton, I would say maybe two or three per cent of them knew what the Games were, and that's only because they had heard me talk about them.

Not to keep picking on Edmonton, because it's pretty much everyone below the 55th parallel, but another example was how cold the Edmonton Sun was to the idea of sending correspondents.

The CBC has always done a great job covering the Games. However, it's mainly CBC North that spreads the word.

And from my humble wanna-be-broadcaster, turned lowly scribe, beginnings in journalism, it is my opinion the Games will never get their complete due if word isn't spread through regional media in the south.

What would it hurt for the Lethbridge Herald, the Saskatoon StarPhoenix or the Guelph Mercury to send someone here to capture the experience and tell it to their readers? I think that would be a pretty interesting read for someone in Orangeville, Ont., or Humboldt, Sask.

The good thing, I guess, is the North will never lose its excitement for something that is completely original. The Games will likely never die, but due is due and some serious recognition is long over... well... due.

JEFF KORENKO:

While there were a myriad of outstanding performances by the young athletes, who could forget 12-year-old N.W.T. netminder Kyle Hodges' stand-on-his-head showing against the dominant Alberta North peewee boys' hockey team Sunday.

Despite the fact he has been playing the game for less than four years, Hodges was not shaken by an unrelenting Alberta onslaught, stopping 50 of 58 shots with little regard for his own safety in his Arctic Winter Games' debut.

One game does not a phenom make, but the kid was spectacular all week.

Someone in the Territories needs to take notice that this youngster could be something special and work to see he is given the opportunity to shine against better competition than the N.W.T. has to offer.

The Nunavut curling teams, whose participants, with the exception of female skip Deneen Reti, had played the sport for a scant four months to prepare for the games.

Yet they enthralled their opponents and fans alike with their never-say-die attitude and willingness to learn from the teams that were better than them.

Here's hoping what they have experienced this week will fuel a desire to keep learning about and competing in the sport and they pass on that knowledge to the many youngsters in their communities.

Team Magadan, despite dealing with visa woes from the outset, has won the hearts of Arctic Winter Games' goers everywhere; but no more so than on the basketball court at Father Mercredi high school.

The visa complications the team encountered meant they had to withdraw their hockey team from the Games and they brought only four players to compete in the round-ball tourney.

Nonetheless, they picked up skiers to play and despite being completely overmatched, there was no quit in them.

Sportsmanship the key for snowboarders

By MAX MAUDIE
Ulu News

With a hearty helping of half-pipers flipping and grinding, snowboarding wrapped up Friday at the Vista Ridge Ski Club.

Winning medals in the boys' and girls' events were McMurrayites Ashley Egan (gold), Cody Burchell (gold) and Colin Campbell (silver).

After the event, competitors crowded around technical delegate Michael Gray, the judges' tent being dismantled behind him.

"Did you guys have fun today!" Gray yelled.

"Yeah!" screamed the kids.

For their good behav-our and sportsmanship they were rewarded with a tube ride on the ski hill. They were pleased.

Burchell was happy he pulled off a frontside-three to switch-three on the half-pipe.

"I wish I could (compete) next time, but I'm too old for it," he said.

One official was heard saying he would like to see the age restriction lifted to 18 years from 16 and an increase in the number of boarders allowed on each contingent. Currently, teams are allowed two boys and two girls.

Myles Simba of team N.W.T. — at 12, the youngest competitor — had never been on a half-pipe until Thursday. He spent the day practising and was pleased with his performance. He nailed a stale fish 360.

"(I'm) kinda sad to see it wrap up," Myles said.

Egan was also sad the Games were wrapping up.

"It feels like it just started ... I'm sad it's over," she said.

Smack-down in Mac town

By MAX MAUDIE
Ulu News

The brothers Frankson put on a show Friday night in the men's open one-foot high-kick.

The younger of the two brothers said he was sure the two would meet in the event to decide gold.

"I knew even before we started," said Carl Frankson, who gives up seven inches and five years to big bro.

Carl set a personal best by kicking a seal target dangling 8' 10" from the floor.

Jesse, who won gold, shares the record in the sport. He tried to break it by an inch when he kicked at 9' 7". He also holds the Guinness Book of World Records record for the highest martial arts kick at 9' 8".

If you think kicking that high is easy, imagine trying to kick a regulation height basketball hoop — not the net hanging from it, the hoop. The hoop is only four inches taller than his best kick.

Jesse missed a new Arctic Winter Games record by a seal hair. He came up with a bit of a limp.

Considered by some to be the most difficult Inuit traditional game, the one-foot high kick demands power and body coordination. The object is to jump from two feet and kick a seal shaped target. One must land on their kicking foot and the landing must be controlled and balanced.

Earlier in the event, one jumper's legs came out from under him as he powered his way up. He slammed down hard on his back and was a little shook up. He didn't attempt his third jump.

Often jumpers would stare down the seal for several moments. Things would occasionally slow, but no one seemed to mind too much. This is a sport not many get to see performed at such a high level. The crowd loved it.

Jesse was impressed by his brother's kicks.

"He got a lot higher than I thought he would," he said.

Bronze medalist Phillip Blanchett, also on Team Alaska, kicked 8' 8".

Fort McMurray's Jennifer Bell one-foot high-kicked her way to a golden ulu Friday night in the ladies' open event.

"I didn't think I would (win). I didn't really practise at this height before," she said.

The 5' 4" Bell's golden kick saw the stuffed seal hanging seven feet off the ground.

Considered by some to be the most difficult Inuit traditional game, the one-foot high-kick demands power and body coordination. The object is to jump from two feet and kick a seal-shaped target. One must land on their kicking foot and the landing must be controlled and balanced.

Bell's style was unique. Most competitors run into their jump. Bell, however, preferred to stand facing the dangling seal. From a stationary spot, she would jump and kick her foot out in what she called the straight-leg technique.

Bell said her family was in the audience and later pointed out her father.

"I wanted them to be proud of me, so I tried my hardest."

Thirty-four-year-old Nicole Johnston, on Team Alaska, and Bell egged each other on.

Bell later had her picture taken standing against the gym wall and holding a sign she said, "I am Albertan."

Any messages for her hometown?

"Alberta laid the smack down in Fort Mac town," she screamed.

Canada

As a strong supporter of Canada's Olympians and amateur sport, Petro-Canada is proud to provide office space and support to the 2004 Arctic Winter Games Host Society.

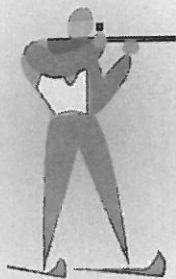

SPELL IT OUT — Team Yukon fans show their team pride as they cheer on the men's basketball team during the basketball gold ulu game Friday night at Father Mercredi high school. Despite the spelled out support, Team Yukon was not able to get the win, and Team Alberta North took home the gold ulu after a 90-56 victory. Photo by TAMARRA PRICE, Ulu News
